Market comment

Global equity markets rose for the second consecutive month this year, with the US (S&P 500: +3.2%) and Europe (Arrestors +4.4%) leading the way. From a sector perspective Technology (+6.3%), Industrials (+4.6%) and Financials (+2.9%) were strongest, with Consumer Discretionary (+1.1%) and Real Estate (+0.2%) lagging. The 10y US bond yields rose slightly to close at 2.72%. Commodities also continued to rise, led by Oil (+6.7%) and Copper (+5.9%).

Despite generally weak economic data, investor sentiment was buoyed by a more constructive tone around US-China trade talks, signs of additional Chinese stimulus and confirmation of the US Federal Reserve's (Fed's) recent dovish tilt from the January Federal Open Market Committee minutes. The February Eurozone and Chinese manufacturing Purchasing Managers Indices (PMI's) both dropped into contractionary territory (49.3 and 49.2 respectively), although in contrast the US remains relatively resilient with the latest manufacturing PMI at 53.

Fourth quarter earnings season modestly beat sharplylowered consensus expectations, although a more challenging outlook for global growth and generally cautious forward guidance from management, have seen consensus earnings expectations continue to fall, albeit at a slower pace. The Alphinity Global diffusion ratio remains negative over the last four-weeks, with a notably defensive sector bias – revisions remain weakest in cyclical sectors including Material, Energy and Financials.

Market outlook

The tug-of-war between slowing growth and policy stimulus is likely to continue for the foreseeable future. So far this year policy appears to be winning, with the dovish tilt from the Fed unquestionably positive for risk assets. In contrast we are somewhat cautious about the outlook for China, where it remains unclear whether stimulus introduced so-far will be sufficient to stabilise growth.

Persistently negative earnings revisions is another reason to be thoughtful about the outlook, although we would note that the pace of downgrades appears to be slowing. We recognise that we are 6-9 months into this global downgrade cycle, and unless the ongoing 'earnings recession' develops into a more serious economic recession, we are likely to see earnings expectations reset over the next few months. This would create a more supportive backdrop for markets and potentially some more positive, pro-cyclical stock picking opportunities. For the moment the portfolio remains overall defensively positioned, with only marginal stock-specific changes made during the month.
